A Truimph of Diplomacy. The removal by Germany of regulations forbidding the importation into that country of American pork is a triumph, not only for American diplomacy, but for good business methods. At no time has there been a real reason for the prohibition, but in the absence of effective legislation providing for inspection in the United States, Germany had at least an excuse for its action.

It became plain that the United States must enact some law giving its officials more power to deal with the question before it could hope to negotiate with success. These conditions were satisfied when the McKinley tariff, with its reciprocity section, was signed, and when congress passed and the president approved the act of March 3, 1891, providing for a rigid system of meat inspection under the direction of the secretary of agriculture.

The result is gratifying to our national pride. What is of more importance, it opens an additional market for the annual sale of not less than $10,000,-000 of American products. Through this striking success of President Harrison, Secretary Blaine and Minister Phelps, the reciprocity policy has again commended itself to the country as efficient in promoting the ends for which it was designed. It was not the assurance of a fair inspection system alone that led the German authorities to take the step they have just taken. The entrance of American products into Germany was aided at every point by the recognized fact that the president has power under existing laws to suspend the free importaion of German sugar if the government of the kaiser continued to treat American products unfairly. As Germany has developed its beet sugar industry by the payment of bounties, her authorities were wise in not persisting in a course that would challenge the use of this power by the president.

The result is satisfactory in every way. Success imposes upon our government and our people the obligation of seeing that our laws providing for from the same issue, is considered of meat inspection are enforced to the letter. Our new system of inspection should be made so perfect as to be placed beyond question. When the Chicago market was taken last week Germans buy our pork products in any form they should be taught to have as much respect for our methods of inspection. The flash test had also been gradually reduced from 150 deg. to 120 deg., which was regarded by most experts as allowing no margin between consumers and the danger line, being only ten degrees above the lowest standard recognized as safe by insurance companies.

Last winter the same parties who had wiped out the chill test made a last and determined attack upon the remaining barriers contained in the law. The safety of the people was ridiculed, and Professor Kedzie maligned as an agent of the monopoly whom he alone had effectually balked in their dishonest designs upon the public purse and public safety. The conspirators were successful, and the inspection law of Michigan is to-day an absolute dead-letter as a measure of safety, with the test reduced to a flash at 105 deg. The employment of inspectors is a farce, as the oil, if honestly up to the present legal standard, is scarcely more safe than gasoline. The only excuse that can now exist for maintaining the office of oil inspector is the fact that it furnishes partisan rewards for political dirty-workers. If farmers and business men lose their insurance policies through this fool law, they may thank the ignorance and greed of a democratic squawbuck legislature for it .- Lansing Republican.

American Tin Plate.

We presume no one will have the hardihood to charge the Iron Age with being biased in favor of any political party or political theory. Its theme is iron-its manufacture, its use, its market-and its utterances in reference to this commodity are regarded as the highest authority everywhere. In view of this, the following editorial from its issue of June 3 will be read with in-"The newspaper opponents of the domestic manufacturers of tin plate appear to have exhausted themselves. There has lately been a notable decrease in the number of adverse articles appearing in the daily press, and in some instances the most furious writers against American tin plates have actually permitted whole weeks to pass without a murmur on the subject. It was, perhaps, rather disheartening to keep up a constant fusilade of bitter arguments and unpleasant epithets while manufacturers were steadily going ahead with their preparations to engage in the new industry as though they were backed by the unanimous sentiment of the country. The violence of the attacks made on these enterprising Americans was too great to be kept up, unless signs of weakening had become perceptible among those who proposed to engage in the business. But their number seems to be augmenting instead of diminishing, just as though the opposition was a stimulus instead of a blight. American roofing plates have a standing in the market now, and American bright plates will soon be so plentiful that they will no longer be regarded with curious eyes. It is suggestive of a favorable change in public sentiment on this question that latterly rumors have become more abundant with regard to the establishment of new tin-plate works and the transplanting of Welsh tin-plate enterprises to American soil."

And the following local item, clipped sufficient importance to reproduce in this connection:

"The first car-load order for American terne plates thus far placed in the ed plates of similar quality, the makers guaranteeing to furnish two good plates can cereals will be largely reduced, that the car-load was shipped from the works on the 27th. They have also ordered plates 30 x 96, which will be shipped later."
